This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

FOREWORD

The Book of Detroiters is the result of a conscientious effort to collect into a single volume of handy dimensions, condensed, accurate, authentic life-sketches of the men who have attained places of distinctive creditability in the city of Detroit. The aim has been to include all those living men whose worth and work count for most in Detroit today: the leaders and prominent factors in all public movements and important private enterprises; the controlling and influential representatives in business, financial, industrial, religious, educational, literary and other interests of useful and worthy character. In a word, the subjects of this book are the living men whose past endeavors or present activities have contributed most to the progressive achievements and influences of the city.

This volume contains the largest number of sketches of Detroiters that has ever been gathered together, and not only in number but in the business and professional standing of those whose life-statistics are presented, the book may fairly claim precedence. It is intended to be a book of easy reference for the business office and the home library. It furnishes as complete a compendium of personal data in regard to those identified with the best movements and interests of Detroit as it has been possible to procure by patient care, experienced methods and large outlay of money. Worthy names have doubtless been omitted, but such omissions have not been wilfully made by the publishers, and probably every instance of the kind is due to neglect or refusal on the part of the man whose name is missing, to furnish the information requisite for biographical mention. All who were considered eligible were solicited in a respectful way to furnish data. The majority, so requested, responded freely to the request and the thanks of the publishers are hereby extended for their courtesy. A few gave information with evident reluctance and others showed complete indifference and let the request for data go unnoticed.

Hosted by Google

Such difference in the relative length of the sketches as may be found is not the result of editorial discrimination. In most instances the sketches which may be regarded as too short have been unduly curtailed because of the insufficiency of the data furnished. Speaking generally, however, the biographical notices combine completeness with brevity, embodying all the salient facts in a succinct narration.

Accuracy has been carefully and earnestly sought. Not only have the facts been procured, in nearly every instance, from first hands, but the completed sketches have been submitted for correction and verification, giving to each, with very few exceptions, the force of autobiographical sanction. Not a single sketch has been paid for or inserted on account of any financial consideration whatever, and all are free from eulogy, and presented in a form that experience has shown to be most satisfactory for ready reference.

The man of business, especially, will find The Book of Detroiters helpful in many ways. It is in a special degree a work of reference concerning the men who represent the business interests of the city. The question often arises, when mention is made of some person: Who is he and what does he do? In the fewest words possible, this book aims to answer those questions and, in addition, to present the main facts in the business record of every person mentioned. The book will give the business man a closer insight into the larger business interests of the city and place him in closer touch with the men who are in control of its business affairs.

To the press, this volume presents features of easily recognized value. Here the newspaper man will find many facts of present interest, and by the use of the book many errors resulting from hasty picking up of details from unreliable sources may, in a large measure, be avoided. This is quite as important a matter to the individual as to the newspaper, for who would not wish, when he becomes the subject of newspaper notice or comment, to be correctly represented, and thus avoid becoming the subject of ridicule or misconception?

Many and varied are the interests controlled or represented by the men whose life-histories are here outlined. While many of these men are natives of Detroit, others were attracted from various cities and states of the Union and from Canada; and the leading countries of Europe have contributed in no small degree to the ensemble, making, as it does, a body of men representing one of the most active and progressive business centers in America. It required brains, perseverance, courage and faith to lay the foundations of the business and professional interests of Detroit, but these important elements have never been lacking, and the result is seen today in a superb, modern city, teeming with activity and steadily extending its influence into new and wider fields.

The Book of Detroiters will be a constant and fruitful source of profit and pleasure in the home library. Often in home conversation the name of some person comes up in such a way as to raise an inquiry or difference of opinion as to his native state, his school or college, his status as to marriage, parentage, business connections, or his past or present civic or other honors or achievements. Such questions, for lack of reliable means of reference, have usually remained unanswered; but with The Book of Detroiters in the home library, a ready, reliable and satisfactory solution of such problems will be always accessible.

Any person who looks through this work intelligently will be amply rewarded for his time. To the thoughtful student of men and affairs who lingers over its pages, the volume presents a marvelous record of individual achievement and makes plain why Detroit has attained the enviable position she now holds. Here have converged the forces that in the eager life of modern competition inevitably come to the front. Favored by location on one of the great waterways of the continent, and the natural outlet of some of the most productive industries of America, the permanent welfare of the city has been yet farther advanced by the enterprising character of its people.

Detroit is recognized as one of the advanced municipalities of the Republic and the extent of the future development of such a city, it is not within the limits of the human mind to foresee. Elsewhere in this volume is briefly but lucidly described by Mr. William Stocking, the well-known Detroit journalist and historian, the present scope of the city's business interests; but it may be remarked here that the wonderful record which he presents would have been impossible had it not been for the men whose names appear in this book. To those men and to their predecessors, the City of Detroit, with its great business interests, its educational and religious institutions, and its thousands of prosperous and happy homes, is a fitting monument.

THE CITY OF DETROIT

By WILLIAM STOCKING

Detroit comes by fair inheritance to the title of a beautiful city. Its founder, Antoine de la Mothe Cadillac, who, with about one hundred followers, first pulled his bateaux ashore on the 24th of July, 1701, used glowing terms in describing his place of landing; "where the living and crystal waters keep the banks always green; where natural orchards soften and bend their branches under the weight and quantity of their fruit; where the ambitious vine, which has never wept under the pruning knife, builds a thick roof with its large leaves and heavy clusters, weighing down the top of the tree which received it, and often stifling it in its embrace; where the woods are full of game and the waters of fish; and where the swans in the river are so numerous that one might take for lilies the reeds in which they crowd together." Having thus lauded the beautiful site of the future city, its founders proceeded to disfigure it with stockade and fort and barrack, with rude dwellings huddled along narrow and muddy streets, obliterating every sign of verdure, scarcely a tree being left within cannon shot of the fort. Their successors for more than a hundred years lived in equal indifference to the appearance of the town.

PLAN OF THE MODERN CITY.

In 1805 fire swept off every house save one. This gave opportunity for an entire remodeling of the place. Under authority of a special congressional act, the old land titles were extinguished and lots, selected upon a new platting, were apportioned to the old owners as well as offered for sale. The town, which received its first city charter the same year, and the territory as well, were under the anomalous rule of the Governor and three Supreme Court judges, who combined legislative, executive and judicial functions. The master spirit of this body was the chief justice, Augustus B. Woodward, who had spent some time in Washington, and had become enamored of the plan of that city as first conceived by the eminent French architect, L'Enfant. The judge adapted that plan to the requirements of Detroit. As originally designed, a complete circle, called the Grand Circus, was to be the central point. Through the center of this were to be two streets 120 feet wide, dividing it into quarters. From the outer rim of the circle were to be avenues, alternately 200 and 120 feet wide. As the city grew new focal points were to be established where avenues met the streets radiating from the Grand Circus, and numerous open spaces would have dotted the city.

Hosted by Google

The plan met with derision from the associates of Judge Woodward and was ridiculed by the people. But it was carried out in part. The south half of the Grand Circus remains. From it radiate two avenues with 200 feet width and two of 120 feet. Through its center runs Woodward avenue, 120 feet wide, extending from the river six miles to the northerly city limits, the lower end being the center of the principal retail district, and the rest of it the location of some of the finest residence sections. Part of the plan remains, also, in the Campus Martius and Cadillac Square, one-half mile south of the Grand Circus, open spaces, around which are grouped the City Hall, the County Building, the largest hotel, the largest opera house and a number of modern office buildings. Crossing Woodward avenue at right angles, still farther down, is Jefferson avenue, also 120 feet wide. The lower end is devoted to wholesale houses; other portions of it are adorned with handsome residences surrounded by spacious grounds. Numerous triangular parks were formed by the intersections of diagonal streets, and the transformation from the irregular and uninviting town to the well planned and attractive city was complete.

The example of wide streets set by these portions of the Governor and Judge's plan has been followed by many subsequent plattings. There are three long business avenues 100 feet wide and many residence streets 60 and 80 feet wide. Tree planting was encouraged at a very early date and has ever since been continued, so that the city has become known as one of well shaded as well as wide and well paved streets.

PARK AND BOULEVARD SYSTEM.

The park and boulevard system has worthily supplemented the original platting. In the river, opposite the east end of the city, is an island, 700 acres in extent, which was acquired by the city 30 years ago. Its surface was originally forest and swamp. Part of the forest has been left in its native wildness; other portions have been cleared and transformed under the touch of skillful landscape artists. The swamps have been displaced by lakes, and these, connected by canals, give a long stretch of enticing waters for rowboats and canoes.

A portion of the center is occupied by a zoological enclosure. Near by is a horticultural building and an aquarium that ranks among the best in the world. These, with other attractions, make the island one of the most unique and interesting parks in the country.

Belle Isle is connected with the main land by a bridge about half a mile long. From this starts the Grand Boulevard, 150 feet, and in some places 200 feet, wide and twelve miles long, encircling the city and terminating in a small park and dock at the western end. The roadway is macadamized and the sides and center have park-like treatment through the whole length. Palmer Park of 140 acres in the northerly part of the city, Clark Park of 30 acres in the western part, and smaller parks on the river front and other sections add to the attractions which together have given Detroit the deserved reputation of being one of the most beautiful cities in the country.

CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT.

Detroit has a unique as well as a long history. It was under the French flag from the time of its founding till 1760, when it surrendered to the British. It became nominally American in 1783, though it and other northwestern posts were not finally surrendered till 1796. The post was occupied by the British again August 16, 1812, but returned to American control September 29, 1813. When French, the city and territory were governed from Quebec; under the British, from Quebec and Fort Niagara. When the United States flag was first raised here Michigan was part of the Northwest Territory, with the seat of government successively at Marietta and Chilicothe. In 1812 it became part of Indiana Territory, with the seat of government at Vincennes. In 1805 the town of Detroit became the seat of government of Michigan Territory, which at one time included all the present states of Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and a large part of North Dakota. It has had five separate city charters, the first in 1805, the second in 1824, the third in 1827, the fourth in 1857 and the fifth in 1883. In spite of its first city charter its corporate name was the "Town of Detroit" till 1815. Then it was the "City of Detroit" till 1827, when it was enacted that the corporate name should be "The Mayor, Recorder and Aldermen of Detroit." In 1857 it was enacted that it should be "The City of Detroit," and such it has remained ever since.

Although the French lost their official supremacy after 60 years of occupation, the place remained French in many of its characteristics for 60 years thereafter. Aside from the garrisons in the fort, the people were mostly French, retaining their old habits, customs, diversions and religion, entirely satisfied with a paternal government. As late as 1818 the question of substituting an elective territorial government for the rule of the appointive Governor and Judges was voted down. About that time migration from New England and New York state set toward Michigan, and when in 1824 the first really republican form of government was adopted, the Governor, the Territorial Secretary, all four of the Supreme Court Judges and nearly half the Territorial Council were men of New England birth. New York and New England influences were strongly felt in Michigan and in Detroit for half a century after that.

MERCANTILE INTERESTS.

Detroit was little more than a fur trading and military post until after the movement from the east commenced. The first comers brought with them New England industry and thrift, though but little capital. As settlements increased they began reaching out for country trade, established Detroit as an important wool and wheat market and laid the foundations of the large wholesale trade which the city possesses today. Detroit was from the outset the natural commercial metropolis of the country west and north. It was the terminus of the stage and steamboat lines from the east and was the converging point of the territorial roads which opened the way to the new settlements. It was nearly along the line of these roads that the first railroads were built, and many of the railroads since constructed have had Detroit as a starting or objective point. The first railroad through Canada also had this point for its terminus, while the water connection with the upper lake region was unsurpassed. For a time this city had almost a monopoly of the "up-country" trade. The movements of the first and last boats of the season were important events.

The advantage which location gave was followed up by an enterprising and energetic body of men who personally pushed their trade. It is an interesting fact that, of the Detroit pioneers in this trade, one afterwards became Michigan's most distinguished Senator and two others became governors of the state. The advantages of location have continued, and with the growth of the city and the settlement of the country the field covered has widened. It now includes not only the whole of Michigan, but northern Ohio and Indiana; parts of Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and in some branches, Canada and South Dakota.

For all lines Detroit has some advantages over the larger eastern cities. Rents and taxes are much less. Crating, cartage and terminal charges are light compared with those in New York. On many goods there is a great advantage in freights. Detroit dry goods merchants early commenced the direct importation of goods from Europe and have always continued the practice. Many American-made goods are brought direct from the manufacturer, thus making a saving of one commission to the country merchant. In some lines goods are laid down in Detroit at the same price as in New York, thus saving to the country merchant freight as well as commission. Similar advantages accrue to other lines. As a consequence Detroit stands well in all branches of wholesale trade, and pre-eminent in some. It is one of the best wholesale drug markets in the country, being second in the volume of its business only to Philadelphia. It ranks high as a hardware market, and has some superior advantages for the general grocery trade and its specialized branches. The wholesale dealers to the number of 100 have recently organized an efficient association for the purpose of further promoting their interests.

The industrial prosperity and rapid growth of Detroit make it a particularly good point for all branches of the retail trade. But it has one peculiar advantage. Its suburban railway system makes it the center of a metropolitan district having a radius of 60 to 70 miles in every direction. The district, including the city, contains nearly one-fourth the population of the state. Every city and village in the district is reached by the trolley system, which gives frequent and rapid service, both passenger and freight. This addition to the natural advantages for retail business which the city possesses is of great value to trade.

NAVIGATION AND SHIPBUILDING.

Situated on the great waterway that connects the Lower with the Upper lakes, Detroit has always had a large share in the lake navigation interests and the trade which depends upon water for transportation. Its river front constitutes the most accessible and safest harbor on the whole chain of lakes, and one of the best in the world for loading and unloading. The river has no tides like those which embarrass commerce at salt water ports. It never overflows its banks and never dries up. It is so thoroughly land-locked that its surface is but little disturbed in the severest storms. It is deep enough for the largest vessels that float on inland waters, and its channel bank is near enough the shore to give it a convenient dock line. There is not a day during the navigation season when a vessel may not load or unload without inconvenience. The frontage on Detroit river is about nine miles, with a channel depth of thirty to fifty feet, and that on the River Rouge is four miles with a depth of sixteen feet.

Hosted by Google

These waterway facilities have not only given a great stimulus to trade and furnished an incitement to profitable investments in navigation interests, but they have made Detroit the leading shipbuilding port on the lakes. Canoes, bateaux and small craft have been built here from almost the earliest times. The first large vessel was built in 1852. The first double-decked vessel for carrying iron ore was built here. The first yard in the west for constructing iron hulls was located in the neighboring village of Wyandotte and was owned by Detroit capital. All types of vessels, from the scow and tow barge up to the largest freighters and the finest passenger steamers have been built at yards in the Detroit district. Always prominent, this port has in the past three years held a position of undisputed supremacy. The addition of a new company and improved facilities of the old brought it to the front in 1905. Of large freight vessels its two companies that year launched 14, with a total tonnage of 134,400. The output of the next largest port on the lakes was 10, with a tonnage of 85,500. For some of the vessels built in Detroit the contracts were made, the keels laid, the vessels launched, equipped and put in commission before the close of the season in which they were commenced, showing a degree of expedition in construction that was a marvel to old vesselmen. The freighters, with a floating dry dock, a large tug, with some smaller work and repairs made an aggregate of about $5,000,000 in value. To this nearly half a million dollars was added in yachts, launches, rowboats and canoes. The industry gives employment to over 5,000 men. In 1906 the Detroit yards launched 13 freighters, with 108,000 tonnage, besides a large passenger steamer and a large car ferry. In the next largest district the number of freighters launched was 13, and the total tonnage 108,800. On the first of January, 1907, the freight vessels under contract in the Detroit district for delivery during the year numbered 17, with aggregate tonnage of 135,500. Contracts for freight vessels in the next largest district numbered 13, with tonnage of 110,500. The Detroit contracts for the year also included the largest and most costly passenger steamer ever built on the lakes, to cost $1,250,000. One of the Detroit companies also had the contract for the tubes for the tunnel under the Detroit river, which is essentially marine work.

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES.

Manufacturing came later in Detroit than mercantile or navigation interests, but it is now the most important source of the city's prosperity. It is fostered by the advantages of water transportation already mentioned. To these are added others equally good for carriage by rail. It is both a terminal and crossing point for the two great Michigan railroad systems that reach almost every city and village in the state. It is on five of the great trunk lines between the East and the West. It has excellent connections with the whole Southwest. Recent additions to its lines give it the best of southern connections, together with entrance into the coal fields of Ohio and West Virginia. It is a terminal point also for the two principal Canadian systems of railway, which reach every place of importance in the Dominion and the maritime provinces. A belt line encircles the city, crossing all of the railroads and facilitating the transfers of freight. A second belt line, to extend around the city at a uniform distance of six miles from the City Hall, has been commenced.

Unexcelled residence attractions, both for employers and employes, favorable labor conditions, good municipal government, a light public debt, a low rate of taxation and an excellent home market are among the other inducements to the location of factories in Detroit.

The city first cut an appreciable figure in the census returns of manufactures in 1860. In the next ten years the capital invested increased 256 per cent. and the value of the product 303 per cent. This was a period of inflated values and the selling price of the product increased by a much larger percentage than the quantity of the output. From 1870 to 1880 was a period of declining values, and while the quantity of manufactured goods increased, the total returns for the product remained nearly stationary. Since 1880 each decade has shown a substantial increase. In that year Detroit was the nineteenth city in the country in the value of its manufactured product; in 1890 it was sixteenth and in 1900 it was fifteenth; it is now probably as high as twelfth.

Within the past seven years Detroit has made a more rapid growth than in any previous period of equal length, and more rapid than any other city of its class. A state census taken in 1904, with the aid of federal agents, furnished a measure of the first part of this expansion. Some of the items from the official tables were as follows:

	1900.	1904.	Increase.
Number of establishments.....	1,263	1,363	7.9
Capital employed.....	$67,544,972	$91,228,214	35.1
Number of wage earners.....	38,481	48,879	27
Wages paid.....	15,392,527	22,786,576	48
Cost of materials.....	47,175,012	66,794,969	41.6
Value of product.....	88,649,635	128,761,658	45.2

The figures are only for establishments working under the factory system. If hand trades were included as they were in the government tables up to 1900, they would add from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 to the product. Manufactories in adjacent villages, which were for business purposes essentially a part of Detroit, had a product in 1900 of about $10,000,000, and in 1904 of $12,000,000. Three of these villages have since been annexed to the city.

The latest reports of the state factory inspectors supplement these figures by others giving still more striking indications of growth. In 1905 the inspectors visited 1,576 factories in Detroit with 76,730 employes. In 1906 they visited 1,638 with 86,370 employes.

The census classification failed to give some of the most important industries separately, and for a number of them business has been much more active since than it was in the census year. For these reasons the Board of Commerce undertook a separate inquiry upon the business of 1905 and has followed it up by subsequent investigation. Unprecedented activity in carbuilding, shipbuilding and some of the iron manufactories, and the addition of new industries brought the total product for 1905 up to $170,000,000 and for 1906 to $180,000,000. The output of some of the leading industries for 1906 was as follows:

Hosted by Google

Car building, freight, passenger and electric	$25,000,000
Automobiles	12,000,000
Druggists' preparations	10,900,000
Clothing, knit goods, boots and shoes, etc	10,500,000
Paints and varnish	10,000,000
Coarse chemicals	10,000,000
Stove and steam heating apparatus	9,300,000
Food products, aside from meats	9,500,000
Foundry and machine shop products	9,500,000
Slaughtering and meat packing	5,500,000
Newspaper publishing	5,200,000
Other printing and publishing	5,000,000
Furniture	5,500,000
Tobacco and cigars	4,500,000
Malt liquors	3,600,000

There are twenty other industries that have a product of $1,000,000 each. The output of 1907 was slightly larger than that of 1906.

One of the most striking features of this industrial expansion is the development in new channels. The automobile industry is entirely the growth of the present decade. For the assembling of automobiles twenty companies are in actual operation in the city. About thirty others devote the whole or part of their energies to the manufacture of automobile parts and accessories. They employ together 9,000 hands and are second only to carbuilding in the value of their output. The manufacture of computing machines is the growth of the past five years. The manufacture of rubber goods is another new enterprise that adds a very important branch to Detroit's specialized industries. The making of coke and the establishment of the first coke iron furnace in Detroit belongs to the same period. The alkali and pharmaceutical industries have increased immensely in their product in the same time. A large brass and copper rolling mill and a number of smaller brass industries belong to the same period.

Three things are especially notable about Detroit's manufacturing industries: the supremacy in certain special lines, the great variety of products not thus specialized, and the number of separate manufacturing districts. Detroit not only has the largest single pharmaceutical establishment in the country, but it has a large lead over any other city in the total value of all products of this class; it leads every other city in the world in the manufacture of stoves and heating apparatus; it makes more than half in number of all the automobiles in the country, and surpasses every other city in the value of the product; it makes over 80 per cent. of all the computing machines manufactured in the country; it manufactures more soda ash and kindred alkaline products than any other section; it is the leading city in the country in the manufacture of paints and varnish.

Aside from these specialties, in which it is beyond competition, the city is remarkable for the variety of its products. It is not specially known as an iron city, yet its iron industries are large and varied, and it is one of the largest consumers of pig iron in the country. The brass and copper industries are almost as varied as those of iron, including nearly every variety of mechanical appliance in which precision is desired, and every article of household furniture and use. Michigan was for many years the leading white pine state, and is still one of the largest producers of ornamental and useful hard woods. Among Detroit's industries are included a great variety of those in which wood is the chief material. The city is a small producer of textile fabrics, but a large manufacturer of clothing, particularly for the miner, the lumber camp and the factory. It makes many varieties of electrical appliances and a host of other things. This diversity of manufacture is one of the best elements of its prosperity. Whatever temporary depression may fall upon one industry others are prosperous. Skilled mechanics are trained in every branch, and work is to be had in almost every line. More important yet is the home market that is created for a variety of products. In many manufactured articles Detroit is its own best customer.

Detroit's manufacturing industries are not, as in some cities, collected in a single congested and unwholesome district. They throng the river front and adjacent streets from Woodward avenue to Belle Isle bridge. They follow the belt line railroad around the city. They make a sizable manufacturing city by itself of the Milwaukee Junction district, and one almost equally large about West Detroit Junction. They occupy a number of separate blocks in the down-town districts. They scatter along the banks of the River Rouge, and their tall chimneys and derricks dot the landscape along the salt and soda district for eight miles west of the city limits. This separation of industries over large areas gives great advantage of profit, convenience and accessibility. It prevents the crowding of freight into one section. It prevents the raising of factory sites to a prohibitive or speculative price. It gives opportunity to intersperse the factory districts with cottage districts so that wage earners may live reasonably near their work.

During the past four years a new element has entered into the growth of Detroit in the removal here of industries established in other cities. About thirty companies have either moved bodily from other localities or else have established branches here. They have come not by reason of artificial inducements, bonuses, free lands or exemption from taxation, but for residence and business considerations alone. Nearly all of them have enlarged their operations since they came here and several are among our largest and most prosperous industries. One of the companies which started less than four years ago with 600 men now employs 1,800; another commenced three years ago with 300 and now employs 1,700; still another commenced two years ago with 400 and now has 1,500 on its payroll. Twelve companies that in the aggregate employed 1,900 wage earners when they commenced operations had 7,100 on their payrolls in the summer of 1907.

The articles of incorporation of companies organized for manufacturing purposes are significant. In the three and a half years ending June 30, 1907, they numbered 556, with $34,662,500 of authorized capital, of which $21,498,807 was paid in, either in cash or other property. In the same period 149 old companies added $12,069,000 to their capital, and 436 permits were issued for new buildings in connection with manufacturing plants, the estimated cost of which was $4,346,750.

DETROIT'S EXPORTS AND IMPORTS.

Along the boundary which separates the United States from the Dominion of Canada, extending from Maine to Montana, there are twenty-three customs districts through which pass all the merchandise that crosses the border for Canadian consumption or for trans-shipment through Montreal and Quebec to European ports. The custom houses are located at the crossing points of railroads along the land boundary, and at the leading ports on the Great Lakes and connecting rivers.

The situation of Detroit at the gateway between the East and West, the fact that it is a terminal point of the two principal Canadian railway systems and the crossing point of several American railroads early established its supremacy as a point of departure for goods intended for the foreign markets. Its shipments are far in excess of those of any other port. For a number of years they were about one-sixth of the whole. The last two years they have exceeded one-fifth of the whole. They showed some fluctuations during the periods of tariff uncertainty and changing foreign trade from fifteen to twenty years ago. Those for 1889 were 50 per cent. larger than for 1888 and 43 per cent. larger than for 1890. There was a large increase from 1890 to 1891 and a small falling off from 1891 to 1892, but since the latter year the tide of domestic merchandise that flows across Detroit river to foreign ports has steadily risen. In 1892 the total was about $6,000,000; in 1897 it was $11,500,000; five years later it had reached $18,694,000, and in 1907 it exceeded $40,000,000. These exports are as varied in character as they are large in volume. Of the 350 classes and sub-classes into which the schedule is divided, 290 are represented in the tables of Detroit exports. The largest single class is provisions, which in 1906 amounted to $11,560,000. Of this, hog products accounted for $10,335,000. It represented in part the output of Detroit packing houses; in much larger part those of Chicago and Kansas City. Iron and steel and manufactures thereof were represented in 44 classes, with a total value of nearly $6,000,000, representing a great variety of Detroit manufactures. Cotton and the manufactures thereof amounted to $5,042,000, of which $4,918,000 was for the raw material. The export of breadstuffs amounted to $2,562,000, of which $1,918,000 was in corn. The following classes also exceeded half a million dollars in value each: Live animals, $1,842,000, of which $1,472,000 was in cattle; coal and coke, $797,000, of which $751,000 was bituminous coal; cars, carriages and other vehicles, $615,000, of which $270,000 was in automobiles.

One of the most striking features of the exports from Detroit is the immense proportion of them that goes to the English speaking peoples. In 1903 Great Britain, its colonies and dependencies took $22,403,535 of our products and all the rest of the world only $345,659. In 1904 the proportions were $23,271,205 to the British possessions against $129,646 to other countries. In 1905 the proportions were $31,800,210 to $55,170; in 1906 they were $36,504,448 to $158,748. Of the latter, Japan is represented by $73,539 and Belgium by $67,436, with insignificant amounts to Germany, France, Switzerland and China, and one shipment each to Siam and the Fiji Islands.

In considering Detroit's export trade it should always be borne in mind that the government statistical tables indicate the point of departure of merchandise sent abroad, and not the point at which it originates. Detroit's location with reference alike to its own country and to Canada, and the character of its manufactures, tends to an especially distinct separation of these two classes. Many of its heaviest exports come from farther west and south, while most of its own manufactures make their way to foreign markets through Atlantic and Pacific ports. Exports of the latter class are numerous and varied. They include some very bulky articles as well as finer goods. Three or four of the largest dry kilns in Russia are of Detroit manufacture; Detroit-built cars roll over the railways of Canada, Mexico, Spain and Russia; the largest brewery in South Africa is fitted with Detroit-made tanks, and one of the largest mines is fitted with pumps and water valves of Detroit make; Detroit-made automobiles are traveling in nearly every country that has passable roads, even to India, Burmah and Siam; Detroit-made agricultural implements go to a number of European countries, and Detroit furniture is making headway in the same markets; Detroit pianos and Detroit self players are found in the homes of a number of European countries; Detroit-planed hardwood flooring has quite an extensive foreign sale; Detroit stoves and radiators have been sold in England and on the continent; Detroit-made adding machines are sold in almost every country that has any system of commercial accounts; Detroit manufactories originated ready mixed paints, and those now have a wide distribution over the world; pharmaceutical preparations manufactured in Detroit go into every country whose people have physical ills to heal; heavy clothing to the Canadian lumber woods and mines; boots and shoes to Canada and the West Indies; toys to France and Germany; plumbers' supplies to Great Britain, to the continent of Europe and to South America; picture frame moldings to Germany; carriages to the mountains of South America; motor boats to England, Russia and Africa; smelting furnaces to the foundries of Germany; these are only a part of Detroit's contributions to the army of commercial invasion of foreign markets.

The imports at Detroit are less extensive and less varied than the exports, but they are steadily increasing. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, they were valued at $2,794,909; in 1903 at $4,311,186; in 1906 $5,596,153, and in 1907 $6,252,034.

DETROIT'S FINANCIAL SITUATION.

The statements of the Detroit banks and trust companies reflect the general prosperity, and furnish an additional indication of the increase of business during the past four years. The following are aggregates of the principal items of statements made at the dates nearest together in 1903 and 1907:

	Sept. 9, 1903.	Aug. 22, 1907.
Loans and discounts	$ 46,606,931	$ 63,523,946
Bonds, mortgages and securities	37,646,000	46,076,130
Due from other banks	12,728,684	16,271,926
Total resources	107,015,952	138,309,533
Capital stock and surplus	12,785,500	16,315,000
Commercial deposits	35,505,583	35,986,356
Savings deposits	42,158,110	54,600,705
Due to banks and bankers	12,540,035	15,547,761

The resources August 22nd were distributed as follows: Twelve state banks, $85,759,427; five national banks, $38,053,704; three trust companies, $14,496,403. The bank clearings for 1904 were $525,513,905; for 1905, $597,642,312; for 1906, $670,136,679. The clearings for the first eight months of 1907 indicated a total of about $740,000,000 for the year.

The Detroit banks are not inclined to encourage speculation and are conservative in respect to real estate loans and to enterprises that have not already obtained a good footing, but they are liberal in loans to well established business houses, whether mercantile or industrial. In some branches of manufacture production continues the year around, while sales are made mostly within a period of three or four months. Such concerns are heavy borrowers at certain seasons, but have no difficulty in securing accommodations, where there is a prospect of liquidation of the obligations at fixed periods. The trust companies also are especially favorable to home investments, and have financed long-time bonds for a number of manufacturing establishments. The relations of Detroit banks are especially intimate with other similar institutions in the state. Detroit is a reserve city, and its banks are depositories for nearly all the other banks in Michigan. It has regularly from $13,000,000 to $14,000,000 in deposits of other banks and bankers. There are about 380 banks and trust companies in the state. A comparison of the statements made at any given period shows that the twenty institutions in Detroit have about 40 per cent. of all the resources, over 40 per cent. of all the deposits and 43 per cent. of the savings deposits of the whole state.

THE GAIN IN POPULATION.

The census tables in Detroit present an interesting study. The population, according to the United States enumeration at the end of the different decades, and the state enumeration in 1904, with the percentages of increase, were as follows:

Year.	Population.	Increase.	Year.	Population.	Increase.
1810.....	1,650	...	1870.....	79,577	74
1820.....	1,442	*7	1880.....	116,340	46
1830.....	2,222	54	1890.....	205,876	77
1840.....	9,102	311	1900.....	285,704	39
1850.....	21,019	123	1904.....	317,591	11
1860.....	45,619	117

*Decrease, Per Cent.

From 1810 to 1820 the population of the state increased 87 per cent., while that of the city fell off. Between 1820 and 1830 the population of the territory increased 256 per cent., while that of Detroit increased only 54 per cent. In the next decade the territory increased 577 per cent. and the city 311. Since then the city has gained steadily on the rest of the commonwealth in which it is situated. In 1840 it had one twenty-third part of the population of the state; now it has about one-seventh. These variations in the percentage of increase in population and its relation to that of the state are easily explainable. Between 1810 and 1820 occurred the British occupation of Detroit and losses by war in this vicinity, and the people became scattered. The decade from 1820 to 1830 was the period in which the opening of the Erie Canal started a rural migration westward, and the settlement of the interior of Michigan received its first impulse. The newcomers did not tarry in the city. Between 1870 and 1880 occurred the panic of 1873, and the business depression which lasted for over four years. The demand for manufactured goods diminished, with a corresponding falling off in consumption and in the demand for labor. Foreign immigration and the rush of men from the country to the cities declined, and a low percentage in the increase of urban settlement was the result. Between 1880 and 1890 business was more prosperous, labor was in greater demand, building revived, and the current of population again set toward the industrial centers. In this decade also there was a large annexation of adjacent territory to Detroit. Between 1890 and 1900 occurred another long period of business depression, commencing with the panic of 1893, aggravated by the free silver agitation of 1896, and still further accentuated by the tariff legislation of 1894 and by tariff uncertainties for three years longer. Since the present decade opened all conditions have been favorable. Everything indicates a larger actual increase in population in the present than in any previous decade and a larger percentage of increase than in any period since 1860. More new industries have been added to the city in the last seven years than in the preceding fifteen. The amount of building done in the city in 1906 was unprecedented; in 1907 it was larger yet and still rents are scarce. On the east and west both manufacturing and residence have for some years extended in such continuous line that a person in passing would not guess where the city ended and the villages began. Four of these villages, with a present population of over 25,000, have been annexed to the city since 1904. These annexations, the number of new dwellings erected and the water board enumeration unite in indicating a population of about 407,000 in June 1907. In 1830 Detroit stood fifty-third in population among the cities of this country; in 1840 it was thirty-first; in 1850, twenty-third; in 1860, eighteenth; in 1870 and 1880 it was seventeenth; in 1890, fourteenth, and in 1900, thirteenth. It is now ninth.

DETROIT'S FINANCIAL SYSTEM.

Good municipal government has been an important factor in promoting the growth of the city. The most valuable feature of this is the management of the municipal finances, which is unique and conservative. The charter limit of its bonded indebtedness is 2 per cent. of the assessed valuation, and even that moderate amount is rarely approached. All measures for raising money, whether by the tax levy or by issuing bonds, must be approved by a Board of Estimates, which has acted as an effectual check upon excessive demands by the departments. This board consists of two members from each ward and five members at large, who are elected upon a general ticket. They hold office for two years. The heads of departments are members, ex officio, with the privilege of speaking, but not of voting. The Board has no patronage and its members must not be interested in any city contracts. It has been in existence for twenty years. A majority of its members have always been substantial, tax-paying citizens, and its influence has been almost invariably favorable to a judicious economy. The charter provides that itemized estimates of the different departments must be sent annually to the controller, who must forward them, with his recommendations, to the Common Council on or before the last day of February. The council takes a month for their consideration and then sends them to the Board of Estimates, which may decrease or disapprove any item, but cannot increase any. The budget is divided among a number of committees, which usually have been very thorough in their examination of the municipal needs. Their reports are considered in committee of the whole, item by item, and are again gone over in general session before their final adoption. By reason of the triple examination of the budget required by the charter, closing with the careful scrutiny given to every item by the Board of Estimates, frauds have been almost unknown in Detroit's financial affairs and the tax levy has been remarkably free from extravagant appropriations. An additional check upon the departments is found in the charter provisions that no money shall be expended in excess of the appropriations, and no moneys shall be transferred from one fund to another. Under this system the tax levy has been kept down to the moderate figures shown in the following table, covering the past five years:

Year.	Assessment.	Tax Levy.	Rate. Mills.
1903	$271,868,920	$4,270,392	16.57
1904	277,962,370	4,083,401	15.33
1905	287,268,670	4,051,463	14.70
1906	305,656,900	4,317,506	14.72
1907	335,759,980	4,996,786	15.49

In the last two years the annexation of new territory added a larger percentage to the cost of the city government than it did to the assessment roll. Additional amounts for schools, the boulevard and other permanent improvements were raised by the issue of bonds. But even with this the appropriations are believed to be less in proportion to the population than those of any other large city in the country.

The net debt of the city July 1, 1907, was $5,184,054, and there were besides $824,000 in bonds authorized but not issued. If these are all used, the debt will still be $712,000 within the prescribed 2 per cent. limit. It may be remarked that the debt is only about one-third that of Buffalo and one-fourth that of Cleveland, lake cities of the same class as Detroit.

For payment of that portion of the debt that was incurred previous to 1902 the current receipts of the sinking fund make ample provision. For the payment of the later bonds a sinking fund is provided by a tax of 2½ per cent. of the face of the bonds in each annual tax levy.

MISCELLANEOUS FACTS.

In brief space may be summed a few additional facts.

The city has an area of 41 square miles, with 670 miles of street, of which 340 miles are paved.

It has 190 miles of public sewers and over 400 miles of lateral sewers.

Public parks and parkways, 28; 1,181 acres; value, $7,428,900.

Police Department, 604 men, 6 matrons, 14 police stations; value of buildings and lots, $318,900.

Fire Department, 537 men, 28 engine houses, 11 ladder trucks and houses; cost of buildings and lots, $643,735.

School buildings, 85; public school pupils, 44,800; teachers in public schools, 1,084; value of school buildings and lots, $4,739,770.

Public library, 228,500 volumes.

Electric lighting plant owned by city; arc lights, 3,241; incandescent lights, 17,527; cost of plant, $1,034,128.26.

Water Works owned by city; supply brought from Lake St. Clair; capacity, 152,000,000 gallons; daily average pumped, 61,357,019 gallons; cost of plant, $7,076,946.84.

Street railways, city and interurban, owned or operated by one company, 741 miles.

Building permits 1903, calendar year, 2,894; estimated cost, $6,912,600; in 1906, permits, 4,705; cost, $13,282,350.

Post Office receipts 1903, $1,011,571; in 1906, $1,515,407.

THE BOARD OF COMMERCE.

A potent influence in the business and civic life of Detroit is the Board of Commerce, whose existence is almost coincident in time with the period of the city's most rapid growth. The Board was formed by the combination of three other commercial associations, and completed its organization June 30, 1903. It includes in its membership representatives of all the large manufacturing corporations and mercantile firms, bankers, capitalists, retired business men and members of all the learned professions. It has been instrumental in bringing many new factories here; in creating the best possible industrial and municipal conditions; in securing favorable freight rates and close railroad connections. Having civic as well as commercial purposes, it has inaugurated movements for beautifying the city; has aided in maintaining a low rate of taxation, and has been responsive to every effort to secure clean and capable municipal administration in all departments. It works mainly through committees, for whose membership it has been able to command the services of many of the most capable business and professional men in the city. It has aimed to foster civic pride and to aid in the creation of such residential, civic and industrial conditions as to verify its motto, "In Detroit—Life Is Worth Living."

RENOWNED FOR ITS BEAUTY AND HEALTHFULNESS.

The Board of Commerce recently offered a prize for the best article upon Detroit. The award was given to Mrs. P. H. Zacharias, whose article contains many valuable facts concerning the history, development, and advantages of the city. The following extracts pertaining to the attractiveness of Detroit as a place of residence, a health and pleasure resort, a convention city, and a business and manufacturing center are timely and interesting:

"Detroit is famed for its beauty and hospitality among those who hold conventions. Scarcely a year has passed in which some national assembly, political, social, scientific, religious or artistic organization has not held itself in readiness to accept an invitation from the delightful and accessible Detroit. Indeed, every year sees some two or three hundred conclaves of various sorts holding forth.

"Detroit is a delightful place in which to live; indeed, 'In Detroit—Life is Worth Living.' Seekers after rest, those who desire to escape from the toil, the heat, the grime and soot of the cities of the East, South and West, naturally come to this beautiful, health-giving place, with its broad, shaded streets, and its miles upon miles of homes, with their well-kept lawns and flower gardens. From all quarters of the earth people come seeking health and comfort, to a city where they are sure of a hearty welcome, for the 'latch-string' is always out.

"To fully realize what the opportunity for outdoor amusements means to the people of Detroit, one should spend a Saturday on the river, in the parks, or amid the living-tide that ebbs and flows aboard the electric cars, the trains, the steamers. Men, women and children, babies in arms, babies in carts, babies in all forms, styles and colors, are there breathing the pure air, taking into their lungs the life-giving breath from the cool surface of Lake St. Clair and other bodies of water. We have much to be thankful for in Detroit; its freedom, its pure air, pure water, its happy homes, and its prosperous, honest citizens, sons of toil and capitalists. It is a city where men live and let live, where the poorest have within their reach the pleasures the rich come thousands of miles to enjoy.

"To specify in what Detroit stands preëminent, and be faithful in the details, would be to write the history of nearly all the lines of principal manufactures. Detroit has excelled in everything that has been specialized. What has been the result? Prosperity. Prosperity of a lasting nature.

"Too much praise cannot be given business men who have earned a reputation like that conveyed by the magic words, 'Made in Detroit.' Having already passed the 400,000 mark in population, Detroit has now taken its place among the great cities of the country, and the sign 'Made in Detroit' is accepted everywhere as a guarantee of excellence. This shows that the manufacturers and merchants are wide awake and progressive. It is no wonder under those circumstances that trade seeks the City of the Straits. It is not remarkable that from the East, West and South buyers are coming to Detroit for the goods they formerly went to other cities to secure. The result of this growth has been to establish at Detroit the largest manufactories for non-proprietary medicines, the largest stove factories, the largest automobile center, the largest varnish factories, the largest paint manufactories, largest cigar factory under one roof, the largest salt and soda industries, largest malleable iron works, largest seed house, a factory having half the capsule output of the United States, and some of the largest, fastest and most luxuriant excursion steamers in this country.

"This is the Detroit of today, where the rights of all are respected, rich and poor alike. Life in Detroit is worth the living."
